This December, Toronto's geekiest theatre company presents the latest offering from its resident playwright D.J. Sylvis. The final script will be the result of a four-month development process. Uncharted Zones is a sequence of four episodes that patrol the invisible borders between human experience and the unknown. Each episode is a rest stop on a superhighway travelling backwards through space and time. The journey, led by an enigmatic Tour Guide, begins in the distant future. At the end of the sequence, the audience returns to the present day: the gateway to their own uncharted zones.

Featuring

Martha Girvin, Amanda Ives, Jennifer Kenneally,
Leeman Kessler, and Michael Mackinnon

Since 2008, Monkeyman Productions has created postmodern theatre with real relevancy to a culture informed by comic books, monster movies, and video games. We speak in the language of an audience that has most truly found its voice in the meme-ridden YouTube-obsessed depths of the Internet. We draw from popular culture in the way that Shakespeare drew from the common culture of his day – these are our mythologies, our tales of comedy and tragedy.

Through the development and performance of work which examines our obsessions and preoccupations in the 21st Century, we hope to discover the ways in which we truly have changed, for better or worse, and the ways in which we remain the same – with a definite eye toward the absurd, but also a corresponding empathy for a subject matter that, in the end, encompasses all of us.
